The pre-Appraisal report has been received in July, 2000 and the case will be placed before the next National Standing Committee on Rural Technology, for consideration and decision, which is the competent authority.

In furtherance of its objective, they may utilise, inter-alia, any fund placed with them under centrally sponsored schemes like JGSY etc. However, since the tea garden land is under leasehold of its owner/management and also since it is not advisable to impair or jeopardize in any way the activities relating to production of tea, a major export commodity, the Panchayat bodies are required to obtain prior consent of the tea garden management for implementing any land-based scheme.

The State Government has also intimated that in other areas as well, the Panchayats cannot implement any development schemes on utilising any land under private ownership without the consent of the owner. The State Government are not aware of any adverse reaction to the guidelines issued in this respect.
